The retreat has been developed as a space in the lap of Himalayan Mountain range in Kashmir which acts as a platform for increased interaction between humans and nature. It is developed in a way which is the state-of-the-art poly cultural natural farm and a self-sustaining ecosystem, which will assist to increase the level of awareness and sensitivity towards nature in general. A definite expanse which will be attempting to replicate the natural forests in its full glory while reduce, reuse and recycling being few of the fundamental guiding principles.

We have installed massive Swiss cottage tents with all the luxurious amenities and facilities a person can desire. There is a separate dining area as well which overlooks the mighty Lidder river where once can enjoy the sound of gushing water while indulging in scrumptious meals with the mountains all around. At the glamping site we are growing lavender, strawberries, walnuts, hazelnuts, damascus roses and more.

We strictly adhere to a “leave-no-trace” policy where we do segregation of solid waste and compost the organic waste and use it in our garden. We even use the solid human waste after proper decomposition and treatment. The gray water has a proper system of pipes which has been laid out to collect, treat and resupply back to the ground.
